T.O.'s lax approach to climate change

Matt Elliott
Tory's Toronto

The waters are running high on Toronto Island.

Widespread flooding means visitor ferry traffic has been halted. All park permits through June 30 have been cancelled. There's talk that the island will remain closed to the public well into the summer. As a result, idyllic weddings have been cancelled. The school is closed. More than half the buildings on the island are at risk of damage. Carp are literally swimming atop the Gibraltar Point baseball diamond.

Meanwhile, back on the mainland, the response at city hall has been a little, well, fishy.

Because — don't kid yourself — this is no aberration.

The kind of extreme rainfall that led to this flooding was ably predicted by those familiar with climate change. Look no further than a city hall report titled "Toronto's Future Weather and Climate Driver Study" from way back in 2011.

"Extreme rainstorm events will become more extreme," the report declared, using data to project weather patterns through 2050. Their numbers suggested Toronto's daily rainfall will increase threefold over the coming decades.

With the island underwater and storms that flood the Don Valley becoming a perennial summer event, those projections are looking pretty solid right now.

But despite ample warning, Toronto politicians have been slow to react to the city's increasingly weird and destructive weather.

Last Tuesday, while island waters were still rising, Mayor John Tory pushed his executive committee to shelve a report on stormwater management. The report would have led to recommendations on a fee charged to owners of parking lots and other large impermeable surfaces, with the rationale that they significantly increase the odds of flooding.

A small shift, but an important one in the context of extreme rainfall. But Tory's committee nixed it, citing the complexity of implementing the fee.

A similar thing happened back in February during the city's budget debate, when council voted against a motion by Coun. Gord Perks to fund climate-change mitigation programs through Toronto's TransformTO initiative.

You wouldn't think it would be so hard to get elected officials to do something about a threat to the homes and lives of their constituents.

For the most part, the city's climate-change strategies are simple. In the short term, they're about building infrastructure to adapt to new conditions, so floodwaters aren't so destructive and energy use is more efficient.

In the long term, Toronto adapting to climate change means pursuing things that the city should be pursuing, even absent an apocalyptic threat. The latest TransformTO report lays out a vision for a low-emission Toronto, with cars banished from large swaths of downtown, a sprawling transit system and efficient housing that enables people to live close to work — close enough to walk or bike.

It's a worthy vision, but achieving it means Toronto must take steps today to show that addressing climate change is a top priority.

To date, despite volumes of study, accurate weather projections and those carp on the baseball diamond, that hasn't happened. Which leaves me wondering: exactly how deep underwater does Toronto need to be before our leaders get serious?

Despite ample warning, Toronto politicians have been slow to react to the city's increasingly weird and destructive weather, Matt Elliott writes. See: Toronto Island flooding. EDUARDO LIMA/METRO

Humans of Toronto by K. Omar

"If I had one wish ... my pageant response is world peace, but that's so ambiguous. I am still seeing famine in many parts of the world so it is for people to have the basic necessities of life — water, food, shelter, security and so on. That's my wish for the world. As for the selfish wish, honestly, if someone takes away my school debt, that would be great.

Board warns parents of overcrowding in Leslieville

Kerry Sharpe with her four-month-old daughter Eisla. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

As the mother of a 16-month-old boy, Michelle Usprech is looking to leave the Financial District where it's just "suits and suits and suits," for a more family friendly vibe, and she's got her eye on Leslieville.

But one of Toronto's most family-friendly neighbourhoods may be a victim of its own success as signs from the Toronto District School Board have cropped up, warning parents in Leslieville their children may not be able to attend their local school because of possible overcrowding, school board spokesman Ryan Bird confirmed.

Those signs warn that "due to residential growth, sufficient accommodation may not be available for all students," despite the school board making "every effort to accommodate students at local schools."

Considered one of Toronto's most family-friendly communities Leslieville continues to increase in density with new condo developments.

"It has a young family vibe to it," Usprech said, a big difference from her current neighbourhood. Having grown up in the suburbs, she wants to give her son the same environment to grow up in, she added.

> It has a young family vibe.
> Michelle Usprech

It's a concern for some parents, including Kerry Sharpe, who lives in Leslieville and has a four-month-old daughter named Eisla.

"It's still early days for me," she said, but, "it is a concern. Even daycare, that's hard to get into, so I don't see it getting any better."

But the signs are nothing new in Toronto, said Bird. The school board's been putting them up for more than 15 years, anywhere where the "local school is close to or over capacity and may not be able to accept any additional students."

For Ariel Litteljohn, a mother of two, the oldest of whom is attending junior kindergarten at Morse Street Junior Public School, the signs raise fears of more overcrowding in classrooms.

Usprech, though, said she isn't worried about her son having to maybe take a bus to school.

"I know he will get an education either way," she said.

Should classrooms start overflowing with students, Bird said the TDSB would make adjustments.

"Children in these new developments still have a home school assigned to their address although it will be outside of the local area," he said.

Jennifer Story, a school board trustee whose ward includes Leslieville, said the neighbourhood is nowhere near that point yet.

The worst-case scenario when schools reach their capacity, she said, is adding portables, which are often the precursor to expanding schools outright to create space. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

PARKS AND RECREATION

Ombudswoman criticizes city's decision to end sports program

Toronto's ombudswoman is criticizing a knee-jerk decision by city staff to turf a toddler sports program from a Beach parkette last summer.

In a report released Friday, Susan Opler says city parks staff, acting "too quickly and without fair process," ejected Sportball classes from Lynndale Parkette after some neighbours complained about noise and traffic.

"Toronto has more than 1,500 parks, many of them jewels of city neighbourhoods," she said in a news release accompanying her report that will go to city council next week.

"They provide green space and recreational opportunities for families, groups and individuals. The city should clearly spell out the process it uses to handle park permits, which must be fair to all."

The media reported in July that Sportball staff, who had been granted a permit to teach young kids elementary sports skills in the parkette, were told two weeks later it was revoked and they risked fines if they returned.

The quick ejection mystified parents of the toddlers and some neighbours who said at the time the noise did not bother them. Some didn't hear the kids at all.

Asha Abji, 4, and Grayson Ryder, 3, play Sportball in Lynndale Park in Toronto's upper Beaches last July. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Matthew Cutler, public relations manager with Toronto's Parks, Forestry and Recreation division, said at the time residents objected to noise and increased traffic.

He acknowledged there was no assessment of validity of the complaints, and quickly moving Sportball to another park was an attempt to "find a solution that works for everybody."

Opler, who investigates potentially unfair interactions between city staff and residents, launched a probe in response to the media stories.

She looked more broadly at how the city approves permits for new uses of parks, handles complaints and decides to cancel or alter permits.

She made eight recommendations, including creating rules around cancelling or altering park permits, giving affected parties a chance to respond and better training staff on policies, including the need to keep records.

Parks, forestry and recreation has agreed to make the changes, Opler said, and her department will monitor their implementation.

Expert says solution lies in building design, energy efficiency

May Warren
Metro | Toronto

As the thermostat starts to slowly inch up, one councillor says Toronto needs to do more to protect tenants from extreme heat.

Coun. Mary Fragedakis said she was "disappointed" the Board of Health decided against recommending a bylaw that would require landlords to keep units to a maximum of 26 C.

"There are so many Torontonians sweltering away in their apartments, and the risk is a very serious one," she said.

"To let this issue slide on to the backburner means it's only going to get worse."

Heat is particularly a problem in older apartments. A recent Board of Health survey found 61 per cent of respondents reported losing sleep due to high temperatures indoors.

Medical Officer of Health Eileen de Villa told Metro that individual window air-conditioning units are a big drain on energy and are often ineffective in older buildings.

Jessie Ma of Ryerson's Centre for Urban Energy said the solution lies in using electricity more efficiently so that everyone can live in a comfortable environment. She said smart grid technology that can automatically adapt to optimize electricity prices against consumer needs might help, as well as designing buildings so they stay cool naturally.

"The challenge is to strike a balance between reasonable electricity costs and also ensuring that everyone's basic needs are met," Ma said.

Not everyone believes a maximum temperature bylaw is the right solution.

"The mayor is concerned about the unintended consequences that could result from this bylaw, such as landlords passing on the costs to tenants through higher rents and the strain on our electricity system," reads a statement from John Tory's office.

Condo proposal worries residents

DISTILLERY DISTRICT

Shadows and rising density at historic site are concerns

Three proposed condo buildings in the Distillery District are rankling residents and raising questions about what kind of development is appropriate for the national historic site.

Some locals say the proposals will increase congestion and hide the district's marquee squares in shadow.

But the architects for Cityscape, the developer on two of the projects, say the development is needed to continue revitalizing and preserving some of the city's most important heritage resources.

The proposals will add around 1,000 new condo units to the district, pushing the density above the target set by the official plan, according to Gooderham and Worts Neighbourhood Association president Michael Brewer.

"It brings a lot of density to the neighbourhood that isn't needed and can't really be supported," Brewer said.

That extra density means more people in the district's public spaces, especially during high-traffic periods like the Christmas Market.

The other major concern residents have is the shadows that would be cast by the towers. As Brewer points out, one of the big draws to the Distillery District is the sunlight the area's squares and laneways get in the summer.

Adding a 49-storey tower at 31a Parliament will drastically reduce that sunlight, Brewer said. "It would shade Trinity Square which is the main feature at this national historic site," he said.

Modernist Humber park structure put on at-risk list

David Hains
Metro | Toronto

To some, it's just a graffitied, flying saucer-shaped public washroom in South Etobicoke. But to an enthusiastic group of architects and heritage buffs, the South Humber Park Pavilion is a modernist jewel that deserves to be rescued.

Designed by Alan Crossley and opened in 1959, the building frequently called "the Oculus" has fallen into disrepair. But a nomination from an international organization could give it an unexpected boost.

The World Monuments Fund, a New York non-profit that champions heritage, has nominated the Oculus for its 2018 World Monuments Watch, an exercise that highlights valuable sites that are at risk. While the funky washroom faces stiff competition, readers can vote on wmf.org to send it to the next round. Previous honourees have used the citation to make their case for funding and revitalization.

Oculus is a Modernist pavilion built in 1959 in South Humber Park.

Car Insurance Renewal Coming Up?
Tips to help you save before renewing your policy.

Shop Around
It is tempting to simply renew with your current auto insurer, but this could end up costing you big time. Auto insurance rates often change, especially in Ontario. If you have not compared auto insurance quotes lately, there's a good chance you are overpaying. Compare car insurance quotes today on InsuranceHotline.com.

Bundle, Bundle, Bundle
If you get your property insurance from the same company as your auto insurance then you will likely qualify for a discount that could save you from five to 15 per cent off of one, or even both of your policies.

Increase Your Deductible
Many people plan for the "what if" scenario when choosing deductibles, but the fact is you can save anywhere from five to 10 per cent if you increase your collision and comprehensive deductibles to $1,000. Remember though, the deductible is how much you'll have to pay in the event of a claim; make sure your deductible is an amount you can comfortably afford.

Pay Your Premium in One Lump Sum
Many companies charge a little extra to cover the cost of administering monthly payments. If you can afford to pay your premium annually, you will ultimately pay less for your coverage.

Consider a Usage-Based Insurance Program
This typically involves a free device that you plug into your car to monitor your driving habits. If you join a usage-based program, you can typically save five to 10 per cent just for signing up, with additional savings of up to 25 per cent for good drivers.

Drive Safely
At-fault accidents and tickets can add up and could cost you hundreds, if not thousands of dollars, in unnecessarily high insurance premiums over the years. Your driving record is in your hands, so steer clear of high premiums by driving safely and within the laws of the road.

Police treat blast as terror attack

INVESTIGATION

At least 19 dead in Manchester as explosion rocks concert

An explosion struck an Ariana Grande concert in northern England late Monday, killing at least 19 people and injuring dozens in what police say they are treating as a terrorist attack.

Greater Manchester Police said 19 people were confirmed dead and roughly 50 were injured by the explosion at Manchester Arena. Emergency vehicles were helping the injured and bomb disposal units were later seen outside the venue.

There was mass panic after the explosion at the end of the concert, which was part of Grande's The Dangerous Woman Tour. The singer was not injured, according to a representative.

Britain's terrorist threat level has been set at "severe" in recent years indicating an attack is highly likely. Police said the explosion is being judged a terrorist attack unless new information proves otherwise.

The explosion struck Monday evening at England's Manchester Arena, where Ariana Grande had performed. The performer was not injured. GETTY IMAGES

Witnesses reported hearing two loud bangs coming from near the arena's bars at about 10:35 p.m. but there were few further details.

"A huge bomb-like bang went off that hugely panicked everyone and we were all trying to flee the arena," concertgoer Majid Khan, 22, told Britain's Press Association. "It was one bang and essentially everyone from the other side of the arena where the bang was heard from suddenly came running towards us as they were trying to exit."

Added Oliver Jones, 17: "The bang echoed around the foyer of the arena and people started to run."

Video from inside the arena showed concertgoers screaming as they made their way out amid a sea of pink balloons.

British Prime Minister Theresa May said the government is working to establish "the full details of what is being treated by the police as an appalling terrorist attack."

She said her thoughts are with the victims and the families of those who have been affected. The government is expected to call an emergency Cabinet meeting.

If the incident is confirmed as a terrorist attack it would be the most deadly in Britain since the London subway bombings in 2005.

Police advised the public to avoid the area around the Manchester Arena, and the train station near the arena, Victoria Station, was evacuated and all trains cancelled.

Joseph Carozza, a representative from Grande's U.S. record label, said the singer is OK and they are investigating what happened. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Judge Abella takes aim at 'narcissistic populism'

One of Canada's top judges has made an impassioned plea to the graduating class of law students at an American university to stand against injustice fuelled by "narcissistic populism."

In a speech that seemingly took aim at the actions and words of the sitting American president, Supreme Court Justice Rosalie Abella did not once utter the name of U.S. President Donald Trump.

Yet Trump's feuds with American judges who have halted his planned travel bans from predominantly Muslim countries, the ongoing fallout from his firing of former FBI director James Comey, and his populist policies ran through Abella's keynote address at a graduation ceremony.

Abella told the graduating class at Brandeis University, west of Boston, Mass., that she has become deeply worried about the state of justice in the world seven decades after the Second World War.

Manage your mental health one step at a time

One in five Canadians are affected by mental health issues. This startling number underscores the fact that mental illness is a common condition that deeply affects families across our country.

There is hope. Mental illness comes in many forms, such as depression, substance abuse, anxiety disorders, eating disorders and postpartum depression. Expert care from a medical professional can make a big difference. But what many might not know is that exercise is also a simple, accessible way to help manage mental health issues.

Dawn Levine, a mother of two from Toronto, experienced her first bout of postpartum depression after having her first child.

"I didn't know what I was feeling, but I always knew that exercise helped. It didn't matter how bad I felt. I would make sure to go for a walk rain or shine, participate in mom-baby fitness or do yoga. The endorphins released from exercise immediately made me feel better. The payback was almost instantaneous."

Now Dawn is well on her way to becoming a certified yoga instructor, with a passion for helping other moms manage their mental health. "Women have barriers to accessing mental health care. I spent many years learning how beneficial exercise such as yoga, walking and running could be for my mental health and I want to share that with other women."

On June 10, Dawn will run in the annual SHOPPERS LOVE. YOU. Run for Women, to show her support for women's mental health. Organized in partnership with The Running Room, this 5K and 10K run is Canada's first and only women's and girls' running race series benefitting women's mental health initiatives across the country.

"Don't feel guilty about taking the time out of your busy work and family schedule to participate in physical activity. It will help you recharge mentally so you can be there for loved ones and take on daily demands," says Dawn. "It's exactly like what flight attendants tell you about oxygen masks on a plane — you've got to take care of yourself before you can help anyone else."

Proceeds from the Toronto run will benefit women's mental health programs at Women's College Hospital. To register or to find out more about the run in your city and what local programs will benefit, visit runforwomen.ca.

50 YEARS
GOING STRONG

For the last half-a-century, GO Transit has helped communities flourish by providing easy access to the city for commuters living outside of the Greater Toronto and Hamilton Area (GTHA). We're proud to carry our riders to their destination, safely and comfortably, on an award-winning service that's known to be fast and reliable. As communities grow and expand, so do we – to keep the region's people and economy moving. At 50-years old, GO shows no sign of slowing down. In fact, we're going strong, stronger than ever.

Over the next 10 years, Metrolinx and GO are planning the largest transit expansion in Canadian history to handle the growth of the region.

Moving Forward

Transforming for today, tomorrow and beyond.

A successful experiment

GO Transit began in 1967, initially as an experiment – to see whether commuters would leave their cars at home and take public transit to work. That experiment now carries roughly 70 million passengers per year on its distinctive green and white trains and buses.

Turning 50 and no sign of slowing down

As the region continues to grow, we continue to grow with it. We're looking forward to the future which includes the biggest transit expansion in Canadian history, and a commitment to new stations, extended hours, and two-way service, every 15 minutes along major routes.

Let's celebrate

On May 23rd, the Toronto Railway Museum will unveil an on-site exhibition featuring GO historical artifacts, including an original GO rail cab car which was carefully restored. The permanent display is open to the public and is great for train enthusiasts of all ages.

PHILOSOPHER CAT by Jason Logan

BLUEPRINT by David P. Ball/Metro

Reframing the road

Bike Month is upon us in much of the country, the perfect time for Canada's cities to put their "bike pedal" to the metal — and shift gears to improve cycling. Unlike many of their European counterparts, Canadian city plans often relegate bikers to second-class commuters. But there's no lack of fixes to move cycling from overlooked to a celebrated (and, in turn, safer) way to move around town.

THE IDEAL BIKE PATH

How a road designed for bikes, and not just cars, might look.

'Idaho stops'
It's been 35 years since Idaho passed a law that's inspired cities elsewhere: it allows cyclists to save energy by treating stop signs as a "yield," and red lights as "stop signs" requiring a full halt before proceeding.

Floating cycle roundabouts
Pioneered in the Dutch city of Eindhoven, the space-age-looking "Hovenring" makes crossing four-or-more street intersections a breeze, keeping cyclists moving at all times by bypassing the crossroads altogether.

'Intelligent' traffic signals
Some Danish cities have special traffic lights that prioritize cyclists over motorists on busy routes. Not only do they give bikes a head-start, keeping cyclists flowing, but at peak-hours they're timed to synchronize at an average cyclists' pace, lowering the number of stops en route.

Bike skyways
As part of Copenhagen, Denmark's goal of being the most bikable city in the world it's built the "Cykelslangen," or Bicycle Snake. The raised bikes-only bridge through downtown allows cyclists to avoid traffic altogether, moving safely above the streets.

'Dutch junctions'
Common in the Netherlands but yet to seriously hit the pavement here, these "protected intersections" feature raised refuge "islands" at the four corners of intersections where cyclists can wait — in plain sight — for their turn to cross unimpeded. And they can also include raised waiting-points halfway across for cyclists to make crossings in two steps.

PUBLIC WORKS
The week in urbanism

ON THE LINE
Cycling advocates in San Francisco are putting their bodies on the line to protect one another. Twice this month, dozens of people donned yellow shirts and held hands to form a human chain to separate the bike lanes from vehicle traffic.

ACROSS THE SEA
A shipping container filled with Dutch bikes is making its way from Europe to Winnipeg to promote cycling in Canada. The Plain Bicycle project arranged to bring 140 used bikes — and their spirit — to our shores.

JOHANNA SCHNELLER WHAT I'M WATCHING

Why did nobody say anything?

THE SHOW: Mommy Dead and Dearest, HBO
THE MOMENT: Dee Dee's parents

So far in this harrowing documentary, we've learned that, for years, Dee Dee Blanchard, perhaps suffering Munchausen by proxy syndrome, kept her daughter Gypsy Rose ill (by force-feeding her medications) and in a wheelchair, though she could walk; and that Gypsy and a boyfriend murdered her.

We meet Claude Pitre, Dee Dee's dad, and his second wife, Laura. They sit on chairs in their house, a riot of knick-knacks. They speak in thick Cajun accents.

"Dee Dee was a filthy person," Laura says. "If it didn't go her way she'd see to it that you would pay." Dee Dee once poisoned Laura by putting Roundup in her food, they say.

Then we meet Gypsy's cousin, a tattooed biker who says: "I figured one day Dee Dee would piss off somebody" and be killed. "I thought it would probably be Gypsy."

If this has you screaming "So why didn't you help?", just wait until you hear from her legion of doctors. They all have their reasons for hurrying Gypsy along, for missing what was right in front of them. Many feel terrible regret. But no one protected this girl; that's the message director Erin Lee Carr communicates loud and clear.

True crime docs need lurid details and this one has plenty: the strangeness of Dee Dee's syndrome; the pathos of Gypsy's romantic fantasies. But the best ones show us the consequences when we fail one another. If you see something, please say something.

Mommy Dead and Dearest airs on HBO Canada from June 1 and is available on demand.

BILL COSBY TRIAL

Race, gender, fame all Cosby jury issues

One-third of the potential jurors questioned in Bill Cosby's sex assault case Monday said they've formed opinions about his guilt or innocence, and 35 of the 100 people questioned said they or a family member or close friend has been the victim of a sexual assault.

Jurors are being selected this week in Pittsburgh for the trial that begins June 5.

The judge hopes to shield jurors from the worldwide publicity of the case, but initial questioning Monday suggested it may take some time to find an unbiased jury.

"No one should make an effort to be on this jury, and no one should make an effort to not be on this jury," judge Steven T. O'Neill told the group.

The trial will take place in Norristown in Montgomery County, where Cosby invited Andrea Constand to his home in 2004. She said she went seeking career advice, and that Cosby gave her wine and pills that put her in a stupor before molesting her on his couch. Cosby, in sworn testimony, said he put his hand down her pants, but that she did not protest.

The judge plans to bring 100 potential jurors to the courthouse each day this week until a dozen jurors and six alternates are found. The first group included 53 women and 47 men, and 16 people of colour.

In answering questions, 34 said they had formed an opinion about Cosby's guilt or innocence; 25 said they would have trouble being fair because of the nature of the charges; and 14 said they had a preconceived notion that would prevent them from deciding the case fairly.

3 ways to pay off your home faster

MORTGAGES

Its likely the largest debt of your life, so make it easier

Gail Vaz-Oxlade
For Metro Canada

In these days of record-high housing prices, there's no doubt that your mortgage is likely the single largest debt you'll ever take on. And if you take a mortgage for $300,000 at an average rate of five per cent and pay it off over 35 years, you'll end up paying $331,789.91 in interest. Wow!

There are three easy ways to significantly reduce the amount of interest you end up paying and the time it takes to get to mortgage-free.

First, choose an accelerated payment frequency.

Most mortgages come with a vanilla-flavoured monthly payment. If you want to speed things along, choose the mocha version: an accelerated weekly payment. Using this option, you'll end up making one extra payment directly against your mortgage each year. One extra payment? What's the big deal? The big deal is that'll save you $70,003.63 in interest. That's gotta be worth the extra 30 bucks or so you'll have to come up with each week, dontcha think?

Second, shorten your amortization.

The shorter your amortization, the more you have to come up with for each payment, but the less you'll pay in interest overall. If you shorten a 35-year amortization to 30 years, you'll save $55,430.90 in interest. Go with a 25-year amortization and save $108,345.42. But that'll mean higher monthly (or accelerated weekly) payments. If you can't swing the higher monthly payments every month? Then…

Third, make a principal prepayment against your mortgage.

Most mortgages come with the flexibility to make an annual prepayment. It usually runs between 10 and 20 per cent of the original mortgage amount. So on a $300,000 mortgage you could make somewhere between $30,000 and $60,000 principal pre-payment, assuming you could come up with the money.

Getting a bonus? Just got a raise? Inherited some money? Now you know what to do with your windfall!

But you don't have to come up with a huge amount for the principal prepayment to work for you. You know that RRSP contribution you made that resulted in the $3,200 tax refund? Slap that sucker against your mortgage each year and you'll save $112,348.58 in interest on that 35-year mortgage.

The next time you "save" money on anything you buy (you are such a smart consumer!), put the money you saved in a jar. When you get to $25, deposit it to a high-interest savings account. Then, when you're closing in on your mortgage anniversary, make a prepayment.

PLAID FOR DAD metro focus on prostate cancer

That fight was finally over

Megan Skead, 25, lives in Edmonton. Her father died of prostate cancer.

"The mourning process pretty much started the day that he was diagnosed. And then it was almost a relief when he passed away, because the amount of pain that he was in, and that struggle and that fight, was finally over for him. I guess the biggest thing that changed since that was just, you know, you don't take life as much for granted. And I'm very thankful for the family that I do have still, because they are the rock in my life. So, it definitely made me a lot more appreciative of the relationships that I have, and not to squander those or let them just pass by. Because you really don't know how long you may or may not have."

HOUSING AFFORDABILITY

Toronto obsessed with home ownership: Study

The Toronto region's shockingly high house prices haven't stopped the city from achieving one of the highest home ownership rates in the developed world, up 23 per cent over the past 35 years.

Toronto's ownership rate, at 68 per cent, is behind only Oslo, Norway (69 per cent), and Calgary (74 per cent) among 38 western cities.

But ownership doesn't equal affordability, says a sweeping study on the Toronto region's housing crunch to be published Tuesday. It suggests the Toronto area will need up to $150 billion in new home construction in the coming decade and most of that should be rental units to make housing more affordable.

The report by the Canadian Centre for Economic Analysis, a research firm, paints a picture of two cities in one. It shows that half of Toronto-area residents are overhoused, with 2.2 million empty bedrooms.

But it would take only about 350,000 bedrooms to appropriately house the 20 per cent of Toronto residents, most of them families, who are shelter-poor.

"If this was happening to our food chain or our water supply, we would have a visceral reaction. But because it's happening in a very slow-burn housing market, it's like heating up the frog very slowly in the pan — it doesn't notice until it's too late," said Paul Smetanin, the centre's CEO, who has assessed the effect of more than 40 housing affordability factors. BREWING

Craft beer goes old school with heritage crop

Owen Roberts
Urban Cowboy

Ontario craft beer is taking a huge step forward, by taking a 100-year step backward.

Here, a storied, century-old Canadian heritage barley variety called OAC 21 is being reintroduced, especially for the craft beer market.

OAC stands for Ontario Agricultural College. The number 21 refers to this barley's row number in the research plot cultivated in 1903 at Guelph by Canadian crop breeding icon Dr. Charles Zavitz.

OAC 21 is ideal for small, specialized batches of craft beer, and for Ontario's particularly humid climate that roughs up cereal crops like barley.

"This is the first step toward revitalizing and re-establishing a viable malting barley production and processing industry in Ontario and Eastern Canada," says University of Guelph plant breeder Duane Falk, who has been pivotal to OAC 21's reintroduction.

Here's what's happening: as competition heats up, craft beer breweries are working harder to distinguish themselves and their products. Beer names have become clever and hip (see poll). And truly local ingredients — water, yeast, hops, and malted barley — are in high demand.

Brewers get even more excited about ingredients from heritage varieties. These are heirloom cultivars that faded into the sunset, usually because plant breeders like Falk developed better varieties (Falk himself has developed 51 different varieties).

OAC 21 was once the industry standard malting barley. SIAN RICHARDS/FOR METRO

FARM poll

Take our poll
Craft beers must have a catchy name. Tell us what your favourite is at metronews.ca

But back in the day, these varieties had something unique that made them stand out.

For example, as plant breeder Zavitz discovered in the early 1900s, OAC 21 was more resistant than other barleys to nasty leaf and root diseases like powdery mildew, leaf rust, net blotch, spot blotch, and root rot.

These qualities allowed it to produce better-quality grain than other barleys in its day.

So, Zavitz selected it for further development. And after considerable testing, OAC 21 was made available to farmers in 1910.

It turns out Zavitz picked a winner. Within two years, 98 per cent of Ontario farmers were growing it.

For the next 40 years, OAC 21 became the industry standard across Canada for barley used for beer production, called malting barley.

Eventually, time caught up with it, like it does with many plant varieties (they typically have a lifespan of about 10 years).

The country's population and beer intake was growing, and more productive varieties were needed to satisfy beer giants' increasing need for volume.

Now, fast-forward to 2017. Today's craft beer brewers aren't giants, and don't have the same needs for volume.

Their relatively small batches use only a fraction of the barley used by big companies.

As a result, they are quite happy with lower-yielding malting barley that grows well here and resists diseases.

STANDING OUT
Breweries like Muddy York Brewing Co. are all about heritage. The company's tag line is "taste the past"

Even better if it's a heritage variety, like OAC 21.

This spring, a field of OAC 21 is being grown in dry, warm, and sunny Alberta. That acreage is expected to provide brewers with enough OAC 21 malt to meet much of the demand in Ontario next year.

THE FUTURE of FARMING

Nature's wet blanket
Humidity creates conditions in grain like barley that are ideal for plant fungus, molds, mildews, and bacterial infections. Think about what happens in your home if humidity builds up. Stubborn fungus and mould take hold. Because of the Great Lakes, farmers' fields in Ontario are subject to similar problems.

Craft beer is everywhere
Ontario now has a whopping 180 craft beer breweries. Another 50 are in the works. Thirty brew pubs have opened. In recent years, craft beer has been the fastest-growing segment within the LCBO's beer category, up 20–30 per cent a year. The annual economic impact in Ontario of the craft beer sector is at least $600 million.

TFC starts title defence with eyes on spot in CONCACAF

Canadian pride and a sense of injustice will be fuelling Toronto FC as it opens defence of its Canadian championship on the road Tuesday against the USL's Ottawa Fury FC.

Greg Vanney's MLS-leading team has a burr under its saddle after thinking it had secured qualification for the CONCACAF Champions League when it won the Voyageurs Cup for a fifth time last year.

A change in format for the CONCACAF club championship led to a scheduling logjam, however. Now Toronto has to win the Canadian championship again to secure qualification. Failing that it will have to beat whoever does win the domestic title to join the Champions League.

"The rules have changed on us .... We've got to go back and we've got to do it again," Vanney said in a conference call Monday. "We'd like to do it through this path because it keeps the trophy in Toronto and it will solidify that (CONCACAF Championship league) position.

"For us the playoff game is solely just an 'oops' moment if for some reason we don't get through this and take care of our business in this tournament."

RECORD

Toronto's all-time record in the Canadian Championship is 16-7-9.

The semifinal second leg is slated for May 31 in Toronto. Toronto hosts Columbus on Friday and Ottawa entertains the Richmond Kickers on Saturday in between.

Vancouver hosts Montreal on Tuesday in the opening leg of the other Canadian semifinal.

Toronto is without injured striker Sebastian Giovinco and defender Nick Hagglund.

The first ever Battle of Ontario is a short turnaround for both clubs.

Ottawa is coming off a 4-3 comeback road win over the Red Bulls II on Saturday that saw the Fury score twice in the final three minutes.

Toronto (7-1-5) played to a 1-1 draw at the MLS Red Bulls on Friday, snapping its franchise-record six-game win streak.

Ottawa (2-3-3) sits 11th in the USL Eastern Conference standings. But it has only lost one of its last eight matches (4-1-3) in all competitions. THE CANADIAN PRESS

IN BRIEF

Donaldson, Tulowitzki both in rehab action for Jays

The injury-riddled Toronto Blue Jays may be getting back two key players soon.

Third baseman Josh Donaldson and shortstop Troy Tulowitzki were slated to play for class-A Dunedin Monday night in a rehab assignment.

Donaldson, making his first rehab appearance, had been out since April 14 with a calf injury. The game was to be the fourth rehab appearance for Tulowitzki, who has been suffering from a hamstring injury. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Griezmann gives good odds of move to United

Atletico Madrid striker Antoine Griezmann has admitted he could join Manchester United in the off-season.

Griezmann told TV channel TMC that the chances of that move becoming a reality are "six" on a scale of one to 10, with 10 equating to a done deal.

The 26-year-old Griezmann added that his professional future should be decided "within two weeks." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Raptors GM Weltman leaving to join Magic

The Toronto Raptors are losing general manager Jeff Weltman to the Orlando Magic.

Weltman will join the Magic as their president of basketball operations, a Raptors team official confirmed to The Canadian Press on Monday.

Weltman was second in command in Toronto behind team president Masai Ujiri. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Legal Notice

Were you an inpatient who resided at CPRI in London Ontario between 1963 and 2011?

A Lawsuit May Affect You. Please Read this Carefully.

You could be affected by a class action lawsuit involving the Child and Parent Resource Institute, formerly known as the Children's Psychiatric Research Institute ("CPRI"), which is located in London Ontario.

What is this case about?

The lawsuit says Ontario failed to properly care for and protect people who lived at CPRI. The lawsuit says inpatients of CPRI were emotionally, physically, and psychologically traumatized by their experiences at CPRI. Ontario denies these claims. The Court has not decided whether the Class or Ontario is right. The lawyers for the Class will have to prove their claims in Court.

Are you included?

You are included in this lawsuit if:

- you were an inpatient who stayed overnight at CPRI, between September 1, 1963 and July 1, 2011, except for any time when you were in the Glenhurst or Pratten 1 wards; and
- to be included in the lawsuit, a former inpatient must have been alive as of February 22, 2014.

Who represents the class?

The Court has appointed Koskie Minsky LLP to represent the Class as "Class Counsel". You don't have to pay Class Counsel, or anyone else, to participate. Instead, if Class Counsel achieves money or benefits for the Class, they will ask for lawyers' fees and costs, which would be deducted from any money obtained, or to be paid by Ontario. You may hire your own lawyer, but you may have to pay that lawyer.

What are your options?

At this stage of the case you have a choice whether you want to stay in the case or get out of it.

Stay in: To stay in the Class, you do not have to do anything. If money or benefits are obtained, you will be notified about how to ask for a share. You will be legally bound by all orders and judgments, and you will not be able to sue Ontario about the legal claims in this case.

Staying in the Class will not impact the support services you receive which are funded by Ontario.

Get out of the Class: If you want to keep your rights to sue individually over the claims in this case or do not wish to be part of this Class you need to remove yourself. If you remove yourself, you cannot get money or benefits from this lawsuit if any are awarded. To ask to be removed, send a letter to the address below, postmarked no later than October 20, 2017, that says you want to be removed from Templin v. HMQ, and include your name, address and telephone number on the letter or send an E-mail to CPRI@crawco.ca including your name, address and telephone number. You can also get an Opt Out Form at www.ClassactionCpri.ca. You must mail your removal request or Opt Out Form postmarked no later than October 20, 2017, to: CPRI Class Action Administrator, c/o Crawford & Company Inc., 3-505 Weber St. N., Waterloo ON N2J 3G9, or send a written removal request by email at: CPRI@crawco.ca, which must be received no later than October 20, 2017.

How can I get more information?

Go to www.ClassactionCpri.ca, call toll-free 1-866-640-9989 (TTY: 1-877-627-7027) or write to CPRI Class Action Administrator, c/o Crawford & Company Inc., 3-505 Weber St. N., Waterloo ON N2J 3G9, or by email at: CPRI@crawco.ca.

Generous Banana and Coconut Smoothie Bowl

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

If you love a smoothie but miss the action of "eating" something, then a smoothie bowl with its cereal-like feel and generous toppings is where it's at for your breakfast.

Ready in 10 minutes
Prep time: 5 minutes
Makes: 2 servings

Ingredients
- 1/2 cup milk or coconut milk
- 1 cup plain Greek yogurt
- 2 frozen bananas (you know to peel them before you put them in the freezer, right?)
- 2 tsp coconut oil
- a couple scrapes of lime zest

Optional toppings
Sprinkling ground chia
- Sprinkling flax seed meal
- 1 Tbsp of muesli
- 2 Tbsp pomegranate seeds
- sunflower seeds
- apple slices
- blueberries
- oats

Directions
1. Place the milk, yogurt, bananas and coconut oil and lime zest in a blender. Whiz until smooth. Pour into a bowl and sprinkle with your favourite toppings. Serve.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20
This is a busy, fast-paced time for you, which is why all your communications with others are in rapid staccato delivery. This is a good day to shop for wardrobe items.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
The Moon is in your sign today, lining up with chatty Mercury. This makes you talkative and eager to begin things. Any new venture will appeal to you.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
This is a vigorous time for you, with the Sun and Mars in your sign. Ideally, you should get more physical exercise to blow off any pent-up steam.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
A discussion with a female acquaintance or friend will be significant today. It appears as though someone wants your creative input or advice about something.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Others might notice you today; it's quite likely because you have something to say. You might make an announcement or even be elected to head a group or club.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Because you hunger for change and stimulation today, try to do something different. Travel, if possible. Visit someplace you've never been before — a store, restaurant or neighborhood.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Discussions about shared property, taxes, debt and anything that you own jointly with others will be significant today. Fortunately, with Venus opposite your sign, relationships with others are smooth.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
This is a chatty day! Quite likely, you will attract someone who has a lot to say. Disputes about shared property and inheritances continue.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Remember to get more sleep during this time, because you need it. Today you will focus on doing anything that makes you feel better organized. This includes dealing with a pet.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
You're in a playful, prankish mood today, even though work still is your top priority. Take a long lunch. Enjoy sports and playful activities with children.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
A discussion with a family member might be important today. This is a good time to focus on home repairs or discussing family plans.

Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
During discussions with others today, you want to get right down to the nittygritty. You won't be interested in superficial chitchat.
